The number of medical handovers as well as the frequency of health care handovers have both increased in recent years. Previous research shows that health care handovers are often faulty. This paper looks into the relationship between handover quality and factors such as health professionals' working conditions, attitudes and knowledge, and the degree of time pressure in which health care is provided. The literature review indicates that there is a need to improve handover procedures to increase the efficacy of health care handovers. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an immunological method of determining presence or absence of an antigen in a sample containing a specific antigen. The present invention is useful in clinical examination, such as blood-type determination and blood-component determination, in academic and scientific field, such as investigation of virus infection, and in general for determination of the presence or absence of an antigen in a sample. 2. Description of the Related Art A method based on the phenomenon that formation of a precipitate (crystalline complexes) is caused by interaction between an antibody and an antigen to determine the presence or absence of an antigen in a sample containing the antigen is generally used for the determination of the presence or absence of the antigen. However, the method is disadvantageous in that the presence of a trace amount of an antigen is determined. Furthermore, the method is disadvantageous in that a sample such as blood is liable to denature, and the result of the determination is often not accurate. Therefore, various methods were proposed, in which a polymer having a group reactive with an antigen to be determined is used, and in which the formation of a complex, formed by reaction of the antigen with the polymer to form the antigen-polymer complex, is detected in place of the formation of the precipitate. U.S. Pat. No. 4,480,024 discloses a method for assaying specific binding polymers, in which an antiserum is reacted with a reaction mixture comprising a polymer and an antigen of interest, and in which the presence or absence of the specific binding polymer formed by the reaction is determined by detection of an antigen-antibody complex which has formed. U.S. Pat. No. 4,181,138 discloses a method for assaying immunoreactive polymers, in which a fluorescent polymeric compound (immuno-sequestering compound) reactive with an antibody to be determined and a conjugate (
